Foreign orders defy Trump	2
Only moderate upturn in the euro area expected	3

The composite Purchasing Managers' Index for manufacturing and the service sector in the euro area rose slightly in July from 50.6 to 51.0. In France, sentiment improved slightly, while in Germany it declined minimally. After a noticeable improvement in the assessment of export orders in recent months, this figure fell slightly in July. Overall, however, foreign trade appears to be defying Trump's tariffs so far.

The composite Purchasing Managers' Index (PMI) for manufacturing and the service sector in the euro area rose slightly to 51.0 in July from 50.6 in June. The consensus had expected an even smaller increase. While the composite PMI in Germany fell slightly (from 50.4 to 50.3), it rose in France from 49.2 to 49.6. In the euro area as a whole, the increase was due to developments in both the manufacturing sector (from 49.5 to 49.8) and services sector (from 50.5 to 51.0).

With today's data, the sentiment indicator continues its halting recovery since the beginning of the year (Chart 1). The indicator remains in the range in which the economy has grown moderately in the past. The cautious development also points to only very moderate economic growth this year.

Foreign orders defy Trump

Analysts currently pay particular attention to the reaction of European exporters to the increased US tariffs and the associated uncertainty. In recent months, the assessment of foreign orders has been significantly better. This is probably mainly due to the fact that key interest rates have also been lowered abroad and investment is increasing there. This in turn benefits exporters from the euro area.

Only this month has there been a slight deterioration in the perceived situation in the export business. This could be due to the higher US tariffs. Overall, however, the export business of exporters in the eurozone continues to develop positively.

Chart 2 - The orders from abroad remain largely unaffected by Trump

Only moderate upturn in the euro area expected

The overall mood in the euro area economy is moderate at best and improving only slowly. Overall, we therefore expect only a sluggish recovery in the euro area economy this year.

However, this masks the fact that developments in the member states are likely to vary greatly in the future. For instance, Germany is likely to increase its government spending significantly in the coming years, while France and Italy are likely to be forced to cut spending due to rising interest payments.
